~~~~~

Brenda ignored my words, taking a piece of bread. "You and Azina are the same person. Right now your girlfriend is trying to score with your lover and it amuses you. You encourage it. You two are a little pack, sharing your dinner."

She shook her head, staring at the broken pieces of bread on her plate. "I'm not dinner, Lia."

Her mouth twisted and she looked up, eyes fierce. "And I am not a lion. I am also not a gazelle. Lia, what I am is your friend. Let's just, let's leave it at that."

I contemplated her, the proud tilt of her head, the way she returned my gaze in defiance, knowing I could read the attraction she held for me. Knowing that, if I were so inclined, I could break that once strong resolve.

She trusted me. She trusted the silent truce we held for years. But I was hungry. Oh, so hungry. And I...

Ah, I just wanted a taste.

She was not a gazelle, but she could be chased. She could be caught. Would she struggle against her desires even in that moment, her eyes glittering, fixing on me as she climaxed? The little wrinkle on her brow, the one that appears only when she's furious, would it make it's appearance at the peak of her pleasure? Or would a new expression make it's debut -one I've never seen?

She blinked at my expression, her voice strained. “Please, Lia. Don’t.”

The temptation was getting to me, coloring my thoughts. My hand gripped the table, digging in past the cloth to the wood below. Two sentences, no more, and I could bed her, make love to her. In the bathroom, even. It had the room. Spacious and clean. Two sentences...

She leaned in, voice low. “You need a friend, Lia. And I need you.”
