How To Get A Job In Sales. First Sell Yourself Rob Elliott

In his book Rob Elliott shares with you his years of experience as a senior executive in international sales and marketing. With a few homilies and a light touch, you will find yourself drawn towards a new philosophical method of thinking about both yourself as an individual, and also your real career objectives. In ten inspirational chapters you will be able to quickly revise your present approach to finding a job. Tedious and unnecessary explanations are stripped away, leaving only the most important core items to be addressed.

You will understand how to quickly raise your self-esteem, and build confidence, even in today's tough competitive job market. Practical steps will lead you along from simple observations about personal appearance, to behavioural tips for the all-important interview.

Once you are organised along these basic lines, you will be able to present yourself as a desirable candidate, who is organised, enthusiastic and sincere.

The formula approach which the author describes will work in most situations. This will give you the advantage of not having to review your situation every time an opportunity arises. You will be ready, all the time.

Once you become stimulated by the enthusiastic tone of this book, you will be energised to take action. and remember: 'If It Is To Be It Is Up To Me'
