Life in the Early 1900's

Starting in the early 1900's, Annie George Turley tells the story of her life growing up in Alabama, including the true tale of losing her 3 year old brother when she was just 7 years old, plus the pranks she and her sisters pulled on one another.

Life During the Great Depression

From outhouses and cardboard soles, Annie's stories of life during the Great Depression are full of humor and good natured honesty about the way things were.

Life as a Nurse

Being a nurse back in the 30's and 40's was no simple thing. Creating their own plaster of paris and bandages to dealing with ornery doctors and difficult patients, her stories paint a picture of nursing without the modern conveniences.

Marriage and Motherhood

From meeting the love of her life and raising three children together as they moved, built and sold houses, and worked together to create a better life and a better future, she discusses the joys and the sorrows.

Love and Loss

As she and her husband grew older together, she talks about what it was like to lose him and having the courage to face life all on her own again.

An unforgettable story, an unrepeatable life, and a quick read

Annie's one-of-a-kind story is broken into a little over 30 tales that span her 94 years. Each chapter is a little over 600 words, so the stories can be savored as time permits.
