"Yes, There are Government Programs for Young Children with Special Needs - Birth to Age Three" is a resource book for parents and professionals who need information on young children with special needs. The Early Intervention program is for children who have developmental delays or children who have been diagnosed with a condition that can cause developmental delays. Developmental delays can be in thinking skills, speech/language, adaptive (such as eating and dressing skills), social/emotional skills or physical skills using the small and/or large muscles. The EI (Early Intervention) program is available in all of the states of the U.S. The main goal is to get your child ready for pre-k and kindergarten to the best of his/her abilities by helping learning through physical, occupational, speech/language and instructional therapies, usually given in your home or the day care setting. Learn all about the program in this easy-to-understand guide of questions and answers. Also, included is all the contact information you will need in any state. Information is included to help you decide IF your child may need to be assessed. Assessment is free and most of the program is free of charge. So, "Don't Worry and Don't Wait." Many parents wait until their child is two and the child could have been receiving services since six months.
