Tender Road: A novel of travel, sex and life in the South. Paul Woodfin

This is a story about the women that Ray meets on a cross-country bicycle trip, using Tender, a hookup app to find places to stay for the night.

In small towns, big cities and everywhere in between, we meet twelve women who have their own stories to tell. Starting in Wilmington, NC and riding through upstate South Carolina, the mountains of Georgia and hills of Tennessee, Ray hears about the lives and loves of the women he meets.

Each woman decides for herself if she wants to have sex with Ray. Sometimes yes, sometimes no. Cuddly and cozy. Rough and fast. A spank or with toys. Ray is there to help. He's riding his bicycle and has strength and stamina to burn - as long as there is beer.

The conversations veer from family talk and chit-chat to raunchy, dirty nasty talk - and back again. As it is with each of their lives, love, work, family and sex are all together. Ray is handy to have around but most of the time each woman can just squeeze him in for the night.

- Julie is dealing with twin girls and her mother, but she gets lonely sometimes.
- Catherine had a messy divorce but has found strength and power inside her desires.
- Monica has a husband who bores her. "He smells now," she says. Ray lends a hand.
- Alexis is young and has her eyes on Ray's friend Scott in Charlotte. But she wants to take Ray for a test-drive first.
- Leslie is smart, ambitious and gorgeous. And alone. Maybe Ray can help.
- Jack and Dawn are swingers from Atlanta. Ray gets mixed up in some rough business.
- Alison is a smart, sexy black woman. She's single but.... Ray might be nice.
- Tara is looking for a little afternoon delight in a small town in Tennessee.
- Erica meets Ray down by the river.
- Nichole is a working girl at the Peabody Hotel in Memphis, TN. But she's a busy girl.
- Stacy lives with her mother but is looking for some hot action.

Ray is riding to get away from work for a while and to get to the truth about family lore. His grandfather built a Viking boat in Minnesota in the Sixties and sailed it down the Mississippi River with his son, Ray's father, when the boy was around 16. It was a coming of age trip, his father told him. But Ray never got the chance to make a trip like that with his father, or a son. So he sets out to test himself against the distance and the elements like his grandfather and father had. He is looking for an altar on the banks of the River, north of Memphis. His father always told him about the trip and that time on the banks of the Mississippi. But maybe his father didn't tell him the whole story. Ray is going to find out.

What Ray finds along the way are women who are dealing with the modern world: work, money, technology and family. Leslie owns a men's clothing store in Greenville, SC, the Seersucker Pavilion. Alison teaches ecology at UT-Chattanooga. Stacy works hard in Memphis. Tara runs an antique store in Lawrenceburg, TN and has an uncle who traveled the world as a radio newsman.

Sometimes he can help, other times not. Mostly he's a gentleman, but sometimes not.

This story twists and turns, meanders and wanders through the (mostly Southern) time and lives of women and men, blacks and whites, in big towns and small. There are a lot of stories along the way. Ray wants to hear them.

Spoiler Alert: he makes it to Memphis but what he finds is not what he expected.

Special Note: the 12th woman is Jackie but she only appears when Monica hypnotizes Ray. I'm not sure if she's real or not. Ray sure thinks she is!

Triggers: sexual situations include descriptions of sexual intercourse, oral sex, bondage, spanking, wrapping in plastic, sex toys, anal sex, rough/forced intercourse, male & female masturbation, male & female ejaculation, lactation fetish & pregnancy sex, orgasm denial, and sexual overstimulation. The sexual depictions are all consensual, including with the swingers.
